WSU Puyallup Master Gardener Program Educates Many at the Northwest Flower and Garden Show

Last week, eight acres of gardens and displays, poetry, and plays filled the Washington State Convention Center for the Northwest Flower and Garden Show. The Convention Center had several floors featuring new garden designs, small-space concepts, container gardens, and displays. A few of the displays featured garden sustainability showing rain-barrel water recycling and compost methods. The sixth floor of the Center was devoted to education and the Master Gardeners Program from WSU Puyallup had a premium spot at the entrance.

Rod Tinnemore, Extension Coordinator for the WSU Master Gardener Program, worked with volunteers and manned the large WSU

Puyallup/Master Gardener display where gardeners and the curious came by to talk to Master Gardeners about programs, plants and many other related topics.

This occasion also marked the first use of the new WSU Puyallup display booth prototype that offers a variety of panels and presentation options to use at conferences or public events.
